NO POLITICAL REPERCUSSIONS TO FOLLOW AUSTRIAN TRAGEDY?

British War Veterans Feted In Germany

NATIONAL FETE NO CAUSE FOR INTERFERENCE BY THE POLICE

France's Military Strength Paraded

ANIMATED BUT ORDERLY CELEBRATIONS

CHINA MAIL - SPECIAL
Paris, To-day.

Altogether 607 military aeroplanes took part in the grand parade for the French National Fete day yesterday, this being the first time that air squadrons have been admitted to these celebrations. The aeroplanes circled continuously over Paris.

Some 1,000 members of the Solidarite Francaise, the Right-wing political association, marched to the grave of the Unknown Soldier to rekindle the "Flame of Remembrance." The demonstrators were in military uniform and were cheered enthusiastically by the crowds that had gathered.

From another direction advanced towards the Arc de Triomphe, under which the grave of the Unknown Soldier is situated, military bands of the 8th Zouave Regiment, meeting the Solidarite Francaise under the arch. As they met the crowds shouted long and lustily: "Long live the army!" —Trans-Ocean Service.

ONLY TRIFLING INCIDENTS

A later message says that the French Nationale Fete day celebrations in Paris passed off without any untoward incidents, the most elaborate precautions taken by the Government police to prevent the feeling of elation customarily prevailing on this occasion from degenerating into political animosities having proved quite adequate, except for a few trifling incidents which the police handled promptly and effectively.

Military Called Out To Assist Police

SITUATION REPORTED TENSE

Belfast, To-day.

After three days of rioting, looting and setting fire to houses and shops, the casualties last night were officially announced to be four dead and 73 admitted to hospital, many with minor injuries.

The mob set fire to 12 houses and wrecked 38 others in York Street. The trouble spread yesterday to the Sandy Row district, where a shop was burned and two others wrecked and looted.

Two companies of the Border Regiment, with steel helmets and fixed bayonets, have reinforced the police. The situation is tense. —Renter.

NAVAL OFFICER TO LEAD BIAS BAY CLEAN-UP

CONFIDENT OF SUCCESS

Thorough Study Of Conditions

[From Our Own Correspondent]
Canton, To-day.

For effective suppression of piracy along the Kwangtung coast, the First Group Army has instructed Captain Yang Chao-lun, a naval strategist, to make a study of the geographical position of Bias Bay and surrounding districts and to use naval methods in suppressing the activities of the marine bandits.

Captain Yang, who was the former commanding officer of the cruiser Chao Ho, reached Bias Bay on Friday night via Hong Kong. He left Canton in the early morning in the company of Engineer-Captain Tao Hin-yung of the Canton Navy, who went to Hong Kong to arrange for the repair of the Chao Ho. At Hong Kong, Captain Yang boarded the gunboat Kwang Chin direct for Bias Bay.

A naval officer said to-day that until recently suppression of piracy was by infantry detachments, who are not used to the methods of the sea rovers. The assistance of a naval expert is necessary in clearing out the pirates in the vicinity of Bias Bay.

WARM WELCOME AT RAILWAY STATION UNPRECEDENTED SCENE ON ARRIVAL

CALCUTTA CELEBRATION

CHINA MAIL - SPECIAL

Berlin, To-day.

The party of five British war veterans visiting Germany this week as the guests of the German war veterans arrived in Berlin yesterday at 4.40 p.m., when the popular demonstrations on and around the railway station exceeded in cordiality anything known in the German capital for many years past.

Besides uniformed delegations representing the German Steel Helmets, the Kyffhauser and the Union of National Socialist War Victims Aid Relief Society, detachments of Brown Shirts, Black Coats and Hitler Youth and countless thousands of the general public crowded around the station, bent on catching a glimpse of the British veterans, who represent societies with a membership of over 1,500,000 former fighters at the front; they gave the police a difficult task to keep the thoroughfares clear. The names of the British veterans are: Major F. W. C. Featherstone-Godley, who introduced his colleagues Colonel G. C. Crossfield, Colonel Murray, Captain M. A. Hawes and Mr. Clive.

The Germans greeted them with the National Socialist salute. The British replied in a few words, evidently speaking with sincerity in declaring themselves deeply moved by the unexpected warmth of the reception.

"GENERAL" COHEN'S FATHER PASSES AT MANCHESTER

Son's Journey From Hong Kong Made Just In Time

London, To-day.

Mr. Joseph Cohen, father of "General" Morris Abraham Cohen, the distinguished military leader in China, has died at Manchester, aged 72.

Mr. Cohen's last wish was to meet his son, who returned from Hong Kong to Manchester in time for it to be realized. —Renter.

The delegation drove to their quarters at the Hotel Kaiserhof, where in honour of the occasion the Union Jack waved from the chief flagpole, with the hooked cross flag on one side and the black, white and red ensign on the other.

GERMANS WIN EXCITING DAVIS CUP ENCOUNTER VON CRAMM AND MENZEL IN 2 1/2-HOUR BATTLE

Prague, To-day.

By defeating Roderick Menzel, of Czechoslovakia, in a thrilling and hard five-sets match, Gottfried von Cramm, Wimbledon finalist, yesterday gave Germany the right to meet America in the Inter-Zone Final of the Davis Cup competition next Saturday at Wimbledon. Heinrich Henkel (Germany), inspired by his captain's fine display, beat Josef Caska in four sets in the remaining singles match to give Germany victory by 4 matches to 1.

The clash between von Cramm and Menzel was featured by many long rallies. The games in the first set went with the service until 3-2 in von Cramm's favour. Menzel's serving then was not of its usual high standard, and the German broke through to secure the remaining three games for set.

Von Cramm was led 3-0 in the second set after missing many shots that normally would have been easy for him. Menzel increased his advantage to 4-1, but the German then got back into his stride and, placing very accurately, won the next five games in a row to take a 2-0 lead in sets.

MID-SUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM IN CANTON Alarm At Military Academy CAUSED BY WILD CAT?

[From Our Own Correspondent]
Canton, To-day.

Aroused from their deep sleep by a sudden alarm, cadets of the Yen Tang Military Academy jumped out of their beds and leaped to the ground from the first and second floors. About ten of them were slightly hurt as a result of the hurried descent during the excitement.

Strangely enough, the officers and cadets refused to disclose what had happened during the earlier part of last week. Villagers living near the camp, heard some noises in the middle of night and were unable to say what all the fuss was about.

It is said that a wild cat killed a kitten and was making a most weird noise on the roof of one of the hostels. A cat was awakened in the midst of a night, and gave the alarm. The battalion of troops is believed to be (Continued on Page 9)

COUNTRY QUIET

INFLUENCE OF HEIMWEHR INCREASED

STARHEMBERG IN CONTROL

CHANCELLOR'S CONDITION IMPROVED

Vienna, To-day.

Prince von Starhemberg has arrived, and is attending the Cabinet Council to-night. The country remains absolutely quiet, and it appears certain that the tragedy will lead to no political repercussions, though the influence of the Heimwehr may be somewhat increased owing to Prince von Starhemberg taking the Chancellorship, while Dr. Schuschnigg may have leave of absence.

Dr. Schuschnigg is somewhat better and was able to endure breaking the news to his son of his mother's death.

Contrary to a previous report, the chauffeur, though given up by the doctors yesterday, is still alive and there is some hope of his recovery. —Renter.

Earlier messages stated that the wife of the Austrian Chancellor, Dr. Schuschnigg, was killed in an accident near Leitz, as the Chancellor and his family were going on holiday to Upper Austria.

It was believed that the chauffeur fainted and the car got out of control, dashing into a tree. All the occupants were thrown out. Frau Schuschnigg was killed instantly and the chauffeur was critically injured, dying in hospital.

The Chancellor's daughter escaped injury, but his 7-year-old son and also a police official in the car were slightly injured.

SIX KILLED IN DUTCH AIR LINER CRASH

MACHINE RUNS INTO DYKE

FOURTEEN RESCUED

The Hague, To-day.

Four members of the crew and two passengers were killed, while 13 passengers and one member of the crew were saved, says an official statement describing the loss of the Dutch airliner at Schiphol aerodrome at Amsterdam early yesterday.

It says that as the liner was starting for Hamburg, Copenhagen and Malmo two of the engines decreased their revolutions. The machine made a forced landing and ran into a dyke and was wrecked. —Renter.

An earlier message stated that a Dutch air-liner crashed while taking off for Malmo in Sweden, and immediately burst into flames.

Fashion Wrinkles

Appearance Marred By Unnecessary Cuts And Accessories

EVERYTHING TO MATCH THE FIGURE

Those of you who are plump of face and short of neck should avoid those "pussycat" bows like the plague — unless you wish to look ridiculous.

If you have a long, thin neck do not be economical with your bows. A large floppy one is so much more becoming and kind to the wearer.

That lean and scraggy look will only be accentuated by "bare" dresses, so concentrate on Fashion's frills if you tend to be too thin.

The new back cowl vogue is not for you if you are at all inclined to be round-shouldered. It will only accentuate the "humpy" look.

A short neck is never happy with a scarf tied high, especially if it is a check one, pulled through rings. It will only make the neck look shorter and thicker.

TREATMENT OF SUMMER HAIR

Create Your Own Style

BE COURAGEOUS

SUMMER hair is a subject in itself—hair that goes swimming, blows about on motor trips, gets wilted and limp-looking. Simplicity is the summer answer. Don't choose hot days to experiment with an elaborate coiffure. Work out something simple. In winter bangs, bias waves and all sorts of trickery are intriguing but in summer nothing is so practical and pleasant as a cool-looking, off-the-brow treatment, especially after thirty. With the new summer face, be courageous about your hair. How do you know you "can't" wear it any other way? How recently have you tried? Don't wait for someone else to set a new style. Do some work on yourself.

SKIN PERFUME

WHITE CONTRAST

Simplicity The Basic On Which Every Dress Should Be Made

For day wear, black and white or navy and white are by far the smartest. A touch of white at the neck, at the waist or sleeves is usually introduced to underline a detail of cut. One point which should always be borne in mind is that simplicity is the basic theme on which every printed dress should be built, the fabric carrying all the fantasy required whether the model is destined for evening or afternoon wear.

White tulle is the foundation of this stunning formal swaggar coat, upon which fringed paillets have been sewn by hand to cover every inch of the fabric. Ketti Gallien, screen actress, is the model.

CHIFFON EVENING DRESS

A chiffon evening dress with a sweet pea design seen recently had sprays of the flowers cut out and super-imposed on the design—all over the skirt. The effect is delightfully airy and almost ethereal.

Excellent After Bath Preparation

CLINGS TO THE BODY ALL DAY

SKIN perfume, a happy medium between regular, heavy scents and light toilet waters, is one of the new discoveries of the cosmetic world. Smelling like a cluster of fresh lilac, it is one of the most delightful after-bath preparations a girl can use. Furthermore, applied with a pad that has been dipped in ice water and then squeezed almost dry, it makes a nice mild skin tonic.

When you have finished your bath, simply pour out large handfuls of the lilac skin perfume and rub it on your body from head to feet. Notice how quickly it dries and how refreshed and cool you feel afterward.

Then, too, you'll find that the faint odour of lilac clings to you throughout the day. In summertime, when it's too hot to use heavy odours, you'll learn to love a preparation of this type.

Not To Be Used On Clothes

Don't put the new body perfume on clothes and handkerchiefs. It, like regular perfumery, smells a great deal better when applied directly to the skin.

Remember, too, that the effect will be more pleasant if you spread it on and rub it in instead of dabbing it around here and there. If, by pouring it into your palms, you find that you waste a little, use a cotton pad instead.

When you have finished, take a fresh pad and pat some of the body perfume on face and neck before applying foundation lotion and make-up. If you have oily skin, use it full strength. If your complexion is dry or normal, soak the pad in ice water before dipping it in the lilac liquid.

EVENING GOWNS

With Puff Sleeves And Trimmings

Equally becoming is one evening gown which is sure to lend an air of charm to any summer ballroom. One with puff sleeves, dresses approximate the garden shirring, has fine blue dots on a background of white, organza in a shadow print pattern. A bow and sash of blue velvet are used to trim it.

NEW COLOURS IN LIPSTICK

Should Contain More Yellow

BEAUTY FOR THE SUNBURNED

WITH your warmer skin tone and powder it is easy to see why your rouge and lipstick should contain more yellow. The crimson, violet and American Beauty shades, which are so flattering to clear, white skins, are not at home on a more richly coloured background. You will not need so much rouge, either—not only because your own skin has more colour, but because a warmer powder will bring extra emphasis to whatever rouge you do use. It is very smart—and quite lovely—to give the skin an all-over even richness, instead of a rouged look, using your lipstick for accent.

And do give the eyes a share in this new summer make-up. The eyes of a sunburned person usually look faded. As the skin becomes darker, eyes seem to lose in colour. This is the moment to try that blue, green or violet eye shadow.

ARMS NOT TO BE NEGLECTED

Elbows Need Beauty Treatment

DAILY COURSE SOFTENS THE SKIN

THE short sleeves of fashion should show the soft, cared-for elbows that were the pride of Victorian women.

Elbows need beauty treatment. Leaning them on desk or table hardens the skin. A nightly creaming will soften and whiten the skin. Cup the elbow in the palm of the other hand, gently rubbing in the cream this way, without stretching the skin.

When arms are "goosey" this is often due to poor circulation. Look to your general health, and for local treatment buy a small loofah and massage the arms with this and an olive oil soap twice daily. If they are very bad, massage olive oil in first and then use the loofah. They will soon improve if you persevere with this simple treatment.

SHORTER SKIRTS

Morning & Afternoon Styles

For the day-time some of the shorter skirts are appearing in public at this moment. The day skirt reaches about to the mid-calf, which is shorter than most that have been worn lately. Even the plainer afternoon frocks are on the short side, and only when dresses approximate the garden party fashion do they make for length, and then very fully. These also have shortish sleeves, and are worn with big hats, so that they are entirely separated from the real day dress.

Welsh Gate Beats Everything

TWICKENHAM ATTENDANCE RECORD SHATTERED

(By J. P. JORDAN)

London, June 18.
The financial statement of the Rugby Union to be presented at the annual meeting on June 23 contains some astonishing figures. The net receipts of the match with Wales at Twickenham were £15,002, a record, and the match against Ireland produced £12,578. The Welsh match was attended by 73,000 spectators, the biggest attendance that Twickenham has ever seen.

Remarkable Figures

The figures are the more remarkable seeing that they were attained in a season when England did not win the international championship.

The union repaid last year £17,150 of their overdraft, which now stands at £10,000. A sum of £41,272 is on loan to affiliated clubs for the purchase of the freeholds of their grounds. The Twickenham property is valued at £138,666.

Car Parks

The demand for car park accommodation at international matches is enormous, and in an effort to keep pace with it more land has been purchased for the enlargement of the north car

TO-DAY'S VERY TALL STORY

Football Team Drugged

OPPONENTS' BANQUET WHICH SUCCEEDED

London, June 12.

To-day's perfectly true football story explains how a certain team in a continental country beat another for the League championship on goal average.

Knowing that only a big winning score would do, the club invited their opponents to lunch before the game—which generous gesture was welcomed with open arms.

So it came to pass that when the match was played the visitors were giggling drunk, and the home team, showing superlative form, piled on 12 goals.

The authorities are now investigating this dark mystery, but no prizes for the solution are offered.

BILLIARDS CHALLENGE

Sydney Lee, the former amateur billiards champion, has issued a challenge to Melbourne Inman and Tom Reece to matches of a fortnight each for $50.

J. E. Greenwood is to be the new president of the union, and another old England captain, Brigadier R. A. Hill, will be the senior vice-president.

U.S.R.C. AND K.C.C. IN RETURN MIXED DOUBLES MATCH

EXCITING CLASH PREDICTED

HOLDERS MUST CLINCH TO-DAY'S MATCH

Some very good tennis should be witnessed at King's Park this afternoon when the United Services Recreation Club entertain the Kowloon Cricket Club "A" team in the Mixed Doubles League.

The U.S.R.C., who have already lost one encounter to their opponents, must clinch to-day's clash if they are to retain the trophy against the Chinese Recreation Club challenge.

They are likely to have their full team—with the exception of J. F. F. Kayll, out this afternoon, while the K.C.C. will be fielding the same team which has played throughout the season.

To-morrow, there is no "set" programme for the "A" Division, although there are quite a number of postponed matches which are likely to take place through mutual arrangement.

LOVELOCK WINS THE MILE RACE

He and his younger brother, Floyd, were lighting the school fire and using petrol instead of paraffin. Floyd was killed in the explosion and fire.

Glenn's life was despaired of. He lost the toes of his left foot and the traverse arch. His right left was shorter.

Yet at least seven times he has beaten 4 mins. 10 secs. He has been doing great running during the winter.

Amazing Figures

Jack Lovelock, the New Zealand and Oxford runner, broke the world's record on the same track, Palmer Stadium, in 1933 in 4 mins. 7 6-10secs. Before his record could be ratified Cunningham established the new figures.

Lovelock is twenty-five. He went to Oxford as a Rhodes scholar and was soon sending running records toppling. When he set up his record time he secured a souvenir the blank cartridge used by the starter.

In 1933 he underwent an operation for knee trouble, and it was feared his running days were over.

Training To Finish

Lovelock has been training to a plan. Each of the first three quarter-miles were to be lapped in 61secs, and the last in better time if possible. This speed would set up a new record of mins. 4 secs. at most.

Some of his trial runs were made in secret.

W. E. Bonthron, the Princeton flier, is another running wonder, for as a boy he was crippled when his legs caught an electric wire while he was climbing a tree. His recovery amazed the doctors.

ALLISON & VAN RYN BEATEN IN DOUBLES

HUGHES AND TUCKEY CAUSE SURPRISE

(By A. Wallis Myers)

London, June 20.

A LONG absent sun returned to Queen's yesterday, and a large gallery gathered to watch a varied and entertaining programme. Nor was the day, which started early and finished late, without its surprises. First of these was the defeat of Allison and Van Ryn, the American four-doubles champions at Wimbledon, by Hughes and Tuckey, each a unit in various combinations that are being considered for the Davis Cup challenge round.

It was a most gallant British victory, all the more creditable because Hughes and his partner had the mortification of seeing the first set snatched from their grasp. It is not a good moral preparation for the second round of a match to hold a 5-3 lead and lose it then to get the advantage back and to have three set balls on Allison's service; finally to forfeit the set after much travail in the 20th game.

BUT THE SECOND AND THIRD CHAPTERS WERE MUCH MORE PROPITIOUS. WITH HUGHES SERVING BETTER ON TURF THAN HE HAS DONE FOR SEVERAL YEARS AND PLAYING HIS VOLLEYS WITH A FINISHING STING, AND WITH TUCKEY, THOUGH LESS FLUENT, ATONING FOR HIS FIRST SET ERROR BY STERLING PLAY, THE BRITISH TOOK THE SECOND SET FROM THREE, AND THE THIRD, AFTER BREAKING THROUGH VAN RYN'S SERVICE, FROM FOUR.

The Americans, of course, have had little practice together—or, indeed, individually, on this side of the Atlantic; the rain has checked normal practice. And results at Queen's, as last year showed, are not always confirmed at Wimbledon, where five sets instead of three are contested.

Hughes Outstanding

Yet, if it comes to old and tried combinations, Allison and Van Ryn are partners of many years' standing. Hughes and Tuckey were playing together virtually for the first time.

Of the four Hughes was the best, and certainly the most canny. Tuckey had his loose periods, but he returned the service steadily and well in the critical stages. Van Ryn's backhand volleying was as good as ever in the first set. Allison appeared to be in need of practice, and, tactically, I think he showed too much devotion to the centre drive, ignoring the lob, which his partner often used.

BRITAIN AGAIN DEFEATS FRANCE IN GOLF MATCH

Hartley's Strong Finish

Lister Hartley started badly against Chauvot. He was hooking his drives, and was three down at the sixth and two down at the turn. Then he recovered magnificently and by steady play took the lead at the fifteenth. Hartley kept up his good form and won the match at the last hole. He came home in 36—one under par.

Francis Francis, runner-up in the French Open Amateur Championship last year, had an exciting duel with J. Bourin, who was brought in for the singles only. The result of the contest depended on this game.

They were all square going to the fifteenth, but Francis struck a brilliant patch and won the next two holes to give Britain victory.

Sir George Clerk, the British Ambassador, and Lord Tyrrell, the former Ambassador, were among the spectators.

AUSTRALIA'S BEST CYCLISTS IN ENGLAND

He has a grievance, and it concerns Southall's criticism of his riding style of "slamming on his pedals up-hill."

"Whether I sit the saddle or stand on the pedals is of small consequence—it's time and distance that counts," said Opperman.

Marathon Challenge

From which you will gather that the rivalry between Opperman and Southall is going to be of the "needle" kind.

The Australian, in fact, is ready to race it out with the Londoner, side by side, from End-to-End, a distance of 265 miles! But his main purpose is to regain the London-to-York record, the 12-hour and the 24-hour times, which Southall has won from him.

"Oppy" is 31, his two companions are 23. He says it will take him six weeks to get into racing condition—two weeks longer than either of those young fellows!

The First Row

Getting in the first row is half the battle, and as Frank Southall, racing cyclist extraordinary, stepped in during the week-end and set up another record.

The Australians led by Hubert Opperman had arrived to attack Southall's times, and while they were admiring the view, as it were, the perry Londoner stole from Liverpool to Edinburgh, thus increasing his list of E.E.A. records to eight!

Southall covered the 210 1/2 miles in about 12 1/2 hours, riding through blinding rain and a clamorous and cheering throng.

Opperman, a former finalist and like him, was quite faster than his movements. He is hoped for this game.

Interesting Lawn Bowls Encounters To-day

The present holders of the Colony Lawn Bowls Pairs Championship, F. J. Jones and A. W. Grimmitt, will contest the right of entering the Semi-Final Round with the Craigover combination.

M. J. Medina and J. Cavanagh, on the Talkoo green to-day.

Jones had not completely recovered from the effects of his fall last week when playing in the league game on Saturday, for he considerably underperformed his movements. He is hoped for this game.

however, that he will be on his usual form to-day.

The title's opponents are both old and experienced players and should make a good fight for it. Medina is right on the top of his form just now, while Cavanagh is also playing well.

The only other game to-day is a single match between H. Rosario, conqueror of J. J. Whyte, and the Talkoo R.C. veteran and J. C. Brown, a former finalist and like him, was quite faster than his movements. He is hoped for this game.

U.S. BASEBALL RESULTS

New York, To-day.

The feature of yesterday's baseball programme was the "double-header" between New York and Chicago in the American League. Teddy Lyons making his debut in the "shut-out" ranks by blanking the Yankees in the first clash. The New York squad, however, took their revenge in the second encounter when Lou Gehrig, one of last year's "Big Four," clouted a four-bagger to give them the verdict.

In the National League, the Reds beat the Dodgers in their "double-header," Herman hitting his second homer of the season.

Results, as cabled by Reuter, were:—

LATE GENERAL YIK CHIH

Special Tribute Paid By Political Council

Canton, Saturday.

The South-west Political Council issued a decree yesterday, mandating the late General Yik Chih, Chief of Staff of the Kwangsi 4th Group Army, whose death occurred on July 8 as a result of serious injuries sustained in a riding accident.

The Council paid high tribute to the services that the late General Yik rendered for the Revolution and deplored the death of so capable a general in this time of national crisis.

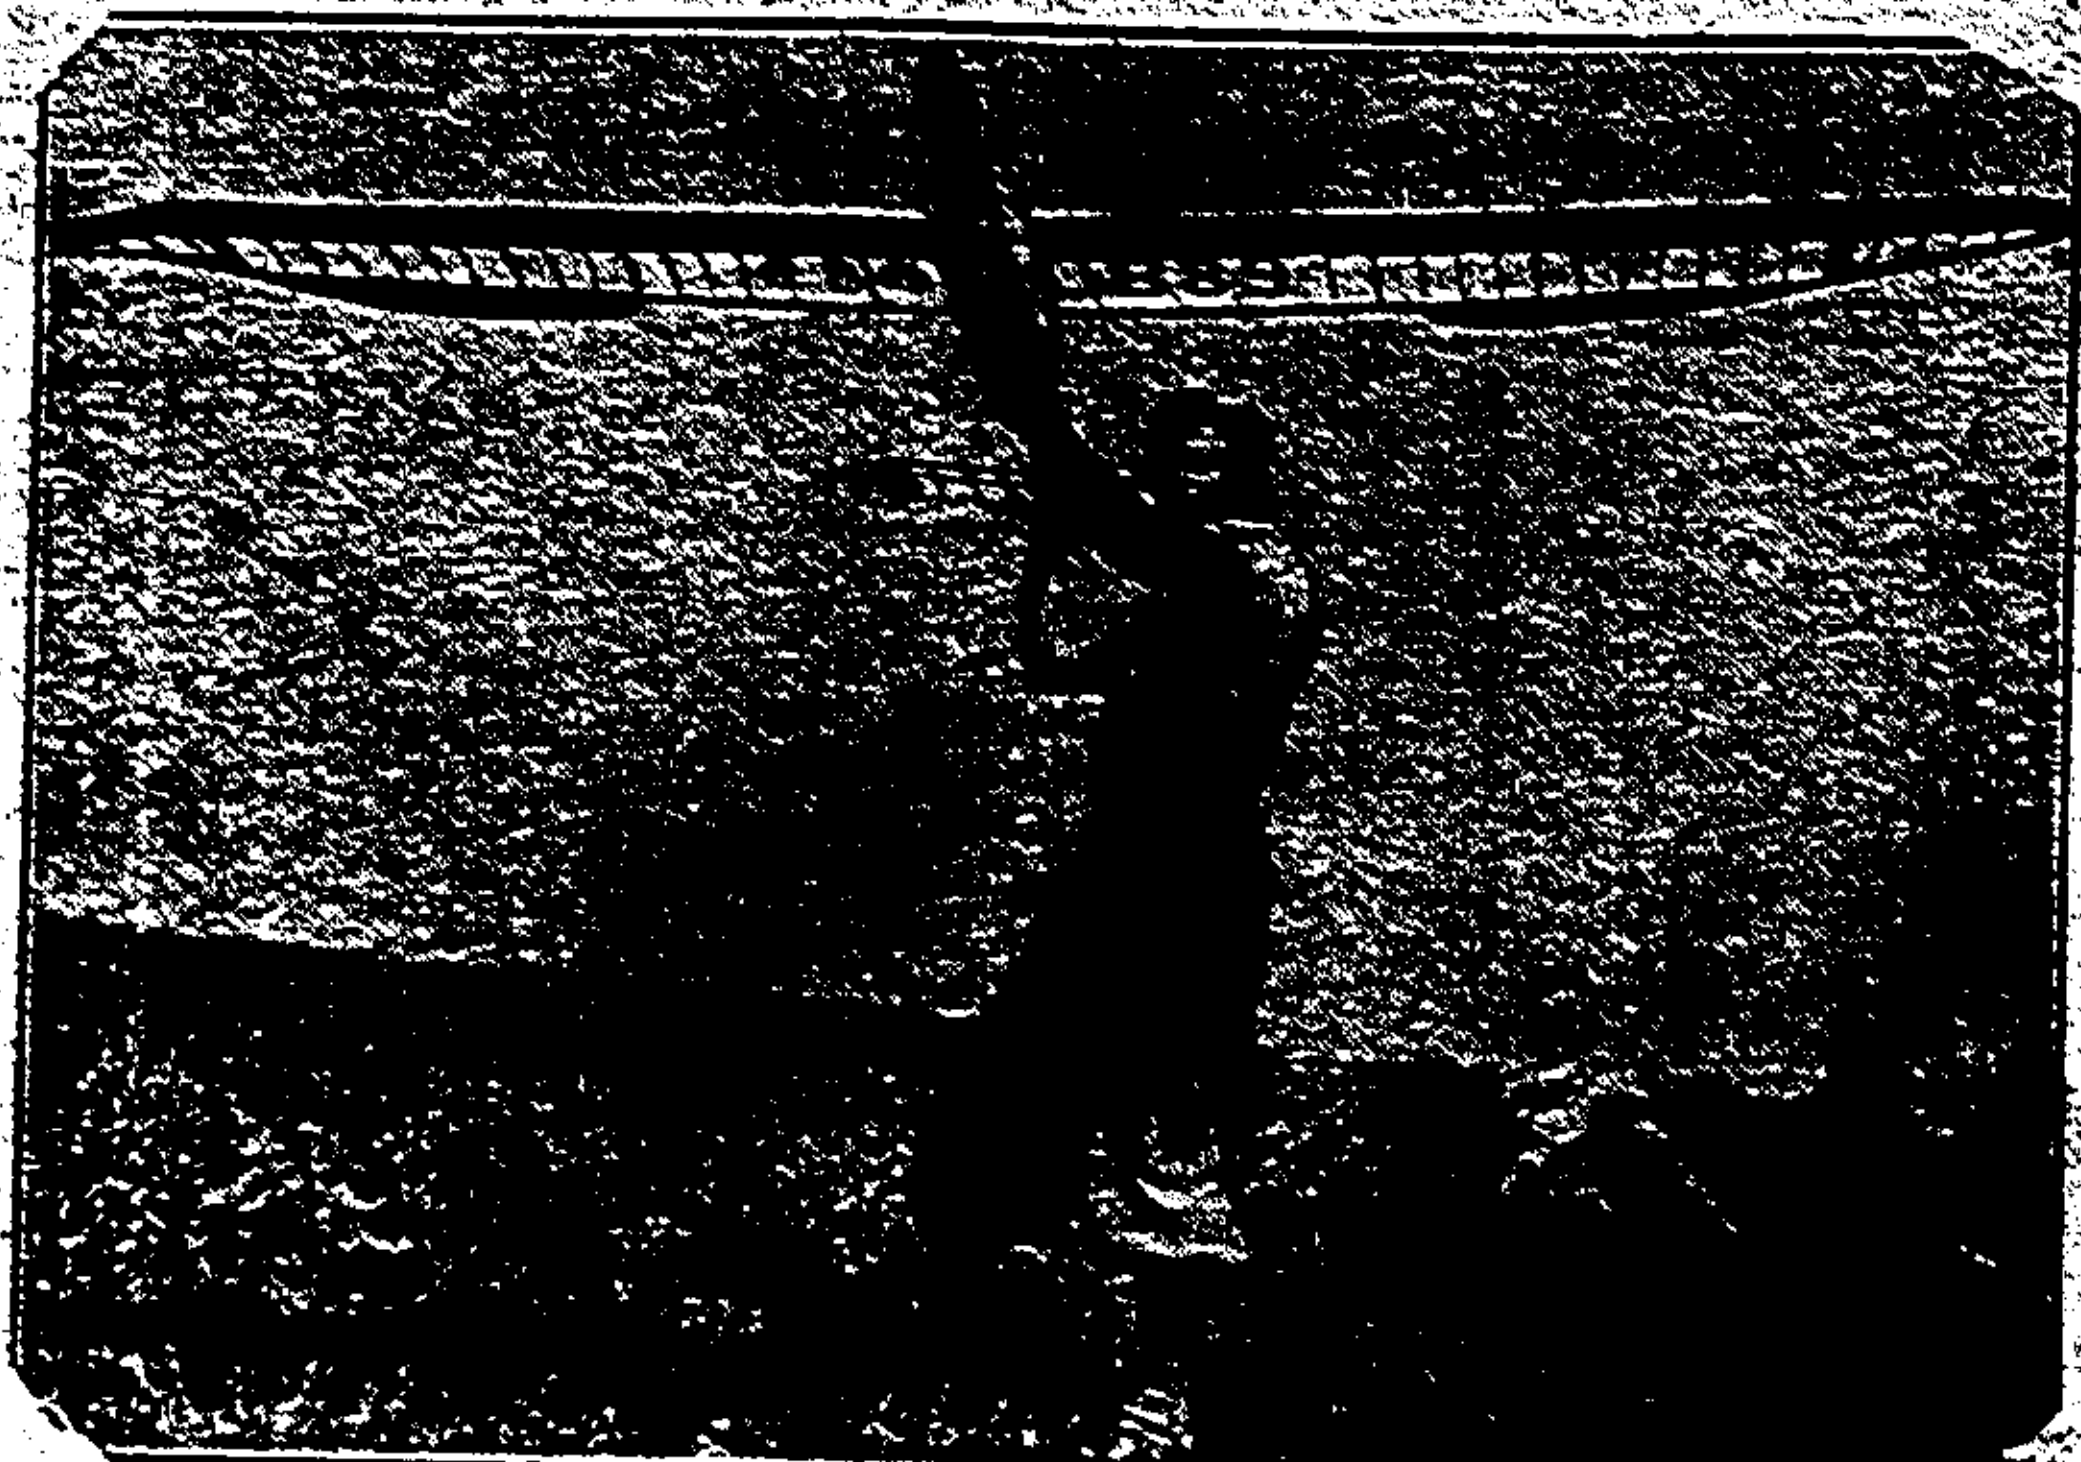

Mr. Muk Woon-chung, a member of the South-west Political Council, has been sent to Kwangsi to express the sympathy of the Council to the family of the late general.—Central Press.

PHENOMENAL ROUND OF SIXTY SIX

of the green with his second, he pitched well out, and ran down the putt.

On fourteen of the greens the ball looked in at the hole, but slipped by; otherwise I tremble to think what the score would have been—it would have approached the ludicrous. Compton was fourth, seven strokes behind the winner.

At the end of the third round Allis, with a score of 70, held a lead of two shots from the rest of the field. The margin would have been more commanding had he not taken four at most of the short holes. If he did not miss the green with the tee shot he took three putts, which was just as exasperating.

Less Accurate Spell

On the homeward journey Allis was slightly less accurate in his driving than usual. Bunker three times, he was back in 36. Bussan moved up from a comparatively lowly position to second place. With a magnificent effort of 67, a score equalling the new record, Bussan was only two shots behind Allis. Bussan was now in a more favourable situation for a grand attack on the leader. He gave a well-nigh flawless display—long and accurate driving and beautiful second shots, principally with the number 4 iron and number 5 and 6 mashies.

In the first nine holes he made only one mistake. This was at the fourth, where he underclubbed himself with an iron instead of taking a spoon and was short. This was a five instead of a four. However, he made up for it with a three at the dog-legged seventh, where he holed a useful putt.

As an illustration of the type of golf Bussan was playing, he collected five 3's at six consecutive holes and eight 3's in the round. Playing with great confidence, Bussan had a wonderful chance to establish a fresh record of 66. Misjudging his second, shot to the last green, he went over and took a five.

Padgham ended his third round of 71—a remarkable record of consistency, though it was not good enough. "This consistent scoring is getting me down. I want a 61 in order to put me right," he complained.

Mitchell Dissatisfied

Mitchell was another who complained that a 71 was of not the slightest use. He had cause to regret one or two dropped shots. For example, he came to the last hole needing a four for a 70, but, deceived by the distance and the breeze, he was far over the green on the first tee to be precise with a No. 3 iron. His chiy back still gave him a chance for a four, but he missed the putt.

Meanwhile Charles Whitcombe was making a great effort to overhaul Allis. Whitcombe was five under four, with two holes to play. He should have been even better, for he was hitting the ball a terrific distance and placing his second shots with extreme accuracy. But he had no luck with his putts, except at the short eighth, where he ran down one of 12 yards for a two.

Everything went with precision and smoothness until the 17th, where he was short with a mashie shot. The last hole also cost him a five, an iron being dropping in a bunker guarding the green, and a five being required to get on.

SOPWITH SAILS ENDEAVOUR TO PERFECTION

Sail Innovation

The race was further of special interest because it was the first time that a Genoa jib, the much-discussed sail which came into such prominence at the time of the America's Cup, has ever been set upon a first-class yacht in English waters and actually used American-fashion when cross-tacking to windward.

Yankee used a Genoa jib to-day when making short tacks against the tide. I thought the sail, when applied to this purpose, was an utter failure because, while the enormous sail was being pulled from one side to the other each time, before the crew could properly pull in the sheets upon the winch the tide caught the Yankee and deadened her way. It was during this proceeding she was overhauled and defeated by Britannia.

To-day's match was the first meeting of the whole class, and the seven great vessels presented a glorious spectacle. There was a gentle westerly wind and, starting from Yarmouth, the course was eight miles to leeward to the West Bramble buoy, with a strong, fair tide and a dead beat to windward back to Yarmouth. Only one round was sailed: 16½ miles.

A Perfect Start

At 11 o'clock setting spinners to starboard, the yachts made a perfect start. Candida, Yankee, Britannia and Astra were in a cluster at the Hampshire end of the starting line, Endeavour on the island end, and Shamrock in the centre. Running almost level for some time, they spread out like a fan and, with Mr. Sopwith getting the best of a breeze off the island shore, Endeavour drew ahead.

As they turned the West Bramble buoy, which was the leeward mark, the times were: Endeavour 0, Shamrock 3min 45sec, Velsheda 5min 45sec, Candida 6min 10sec, Astra 8min 30sec. Yankee now set her immense Genoa jib. With the exception of Astra, which carried the old style of head-sail, the others had double-clewed jibs, Britannia using her new one for the first time. Britannia also had a new Park Avenue boom.

Endeavour set out to windward grandly and, sailing like the best cutter ever seen, soon had a commanding lead of the entire fleet, followed by Candida, Astra, and Velsheda.

Shamrock worked the island shore while the rest cross-tacked along the Hampshire coast. Britannia collared the Yankees and followed Velsheda. It was an astonishing sight to see the entire fleet of English boats ahead of the Yankee as they turned to

NEW RELIGION IN RUSSIA

Country Terrorised

We need not suppose that any large number of Russians are really convinced. They are terrified and hypnotised, and the country is hermetically sealed against the entrance of knowledge from outside. The peasants, who began the revolution, are certainly not Communists, and Lenin, with his cynical candour, said that out of every hundred members of the Communist Party one was a genuine Communist, thirty-nine were criminals, and sixty fools.

Hatred is a very poor basis for a religion. It is likely to burn itself away. But it does not follow that this new religion will die out. Religions succeed not because they are true but because they provide what people want; and if people want something different, rather than die, they will change their colour like a chameleon.

Personally, I think that the Russians, who have already substituted State capitalism for Communism, will quietly drop Hegel and Marx, or twist them still further, and revert, with increased zest, to their old policy of territorial expansion. The Germans are honestly convinced that this will happen; and while we are scolding Hitler for his inconvenient activities we ought in fairness to consider what an invasion by a Red army would be like. I am afraid the League of Nations would not be much protection.

windward through the Western Solent.

Astra & Yankee Ashore

Astra ran ashore off the Beaulieu river, and was a quarter of an hour getting off. Yankee also ran aground, and was hung up for a couple of minutes, but it did not affect the result of the race because she was the last of the fleet at the time. Her failure to hold the English yachts turning to windward in the light breeze was a surprise to everybody.

It was a most interesting day's sport and the best regatta of the present season. Sir Philip Hunlok, at the helm of Britannia, has every reason to be satisfied with the alteration to his Majesty's yacht.

The removal of her copper, the new powerful quadrilateral or double-clewed jib, and the new triangular boom seem to give Britannia more life in the light breeze, and it was a revelation to see this vessel, built in Victorian days, sailing tack for tack upon the weather of the Yankee and leaving her astern in a fair turn to windward through the Solent channel.

GERMANS WIN EXCITING DAVIS CUP ENCOUNTER

MENZEL'S RECOVERY

Menzel was in magnificent form in the third set, though von Cramm also gave a rousing display, his returns on the backhand and his shots down the sidelines working the crowd up to a terrific pitch of excitement.

Von Cramm led 2-0, but Menzel then increased the pressure, putting tremendous power into his shots to secure the lead at 4-2, from which point he secured the set.

Every point had to be fought for in the set, Menzel breaking through at 4-2 to lead 5-3, from which point he secured the set after 35 minutes of grueling play.

CZECH VERY TIRED

Menzel appeared to be very tired and affected by the heat in the final set, and von Cramm, playing his usually stylish game, which was particularly good on the backhand, took the deciding set easily to win a finely-contested match.

H. Henkel, of Germany, made up for his lapse against Menzel last Friday when he beat J. Caska, of Czechoslovakia, in four sets. Caska began well with quick, accurate play in the first set, but once the German had found his form, his superiority was pronounced.

Henkel played a great variety of strokes with masterly technique.—Reuter.

Full scores for the encounter were:—

SINGLES

Roderick Menzel (Czechoslovakia) beat Heinrich Henkel (Germany) 7-5, 6-1, 4-6, 2-6, 6-4.
Gottfried von Cramm (Germany) beat Josef Caska (Czechoslovakia) 6-2, 6-4, 6-2.

Gottfried von Cramm (Germany) beat Roderick Menzel (Czechoslovakia) 6-2, 6-4, 3-6, 5-7, 6-1.
H. Henkel (Germany) beat J. Caska (Czechoslovakia) 2-6, 7-5, 6-4, 5-0.

DOUBLES

Gottfried von Cramm and K. Lund (Germany) beat Roderick Menzel and H. Malacke (Czechoslovakia) 6-3, 9-7, 6-3.

A Trans-Ocean message states that rarely in the annals of tennis has an encounter been fought to a finish so desperately as the last stage of the Davis Cup European Zone final yesterday.

The struggle between von Cramm and Menzel lasted for 2½ hours in sweltering heat which was almost too much for the on-lookers.

ANN HARDING'S DIVORCE

Cited For Contempt Of Court

CUSTODY OF CHILD

Los Angeles.

Her repeated refusal to give a court ordered deposition in connection with the suit brought by her divorced husband, Mr. Harry Bannister over the custody of their child, Jane Bannister, aged 7, resulted recently in Ann Harding, film actress, being cited for contempt of court.

Judge Edward T. Bishop ordered Miss Harding to appear in person on July 1 to show cause why she should not be adjudged in contempt and to explain why she has refused to give a deposition in the case.

Another man was injected into the affair when a partial deposition was introduced by Bannister's attorney, Mr. Dudley Murphy, but refused to answer questions as to whether he had been a guest at her home or whether she had accompanied him on trips.

APPLICATION FOR DISCHARGE SUPREME COURT CASE

SUBMISSION DISMISSED BY CHIEF JUSTICE

An application for the discharge of Tong Wan-ku, alias Tong Chau-ming, accused of embezzlement and larceny in Canton in December, 1932, was made before His Honour the Chief Justice, Sir Athol MacGregor, in the Supreme Court this morning. The application was made on the grounds that the principal witness had not been cross-examined by the fugitive's solicitor, and that in any case the witnesses' evidence was inadmissible.

Mr. F. C. Jenkin, K.C., instructed by Mr. F. X. D'Almada, appeared on behalf of the fugitive, while the Assistant Attorney-General, Mr. J. A. Fraser, and Mr. W. J. Lockhart, Smith, Assistant Crown Solicitor, were for the Crown.

In his opening, Mr. Jenkin said that a review of the facts of the case disclosed that the fugitive was arrested in Hong Kong and was brought in due course before the First Magistrate, Mr. W. Schofield. There were several formal remands and the first day on which evidence had been taken was May 15, when a number of witnesses had been called, including a man named Wong Pui-sun. His evidence had been taken in the afternoon, when he was examined in chief, and in chief only.

Cross-Examination Reserved. At this time, and throughout the case, the fugitive had been represented by Mr. D'Almada, and he asked Mr. Schofield to allow him to reserve his cross-examination of the witness, a common request, with which the Magistrate complied.

Unfortunately, at the next sitting Mr. D'Almada was indisposed and was unable to attend. His son, however, held a watching brief over the case. Four witnesses were called on this occasion, including a sergeant in the Canton Police and Chief Inspector Shannon of the Hong Kong Police. Cross-examination of these witnesses was also reserved.

The next hearing was only May 18, when Mr. D'Almada again appeared but declined to conduct his case because he was unwell. After this sitting Wong Pui-sun disappeared, presumably having gone to Canton and had not been heard of since.

Magistrate's Deposition. In his depositions the magistrate asserted that if there was any doubt in the case then the benefit of the doubt must be given to the prosecution. Mr. Jenkin stated that he did not know what principle of law Mr. Schofield had intended by that remark, but what ever it was in it was quite unknown to him (Mr. Jenkin). Mr. Jenkin then submitted his points, stating that evidence which had not been examined was not recognised. As the chief witness, Wong Pui-sun, had not been so examined, his evidence was inadmissible, and as there was no other evidence to convict the case fell through.

The application was dismissed.

STARHEMBERG AT HELM. The Cabinet met immediately the news of the accident was received, and the Vice-Chancellor, Prince von Starheemberg, who was on holiday in Venice, engaged a special aeroplane to return to Vienna. Prince von Starheemberg would probably take the post of Chancellor until Herr Schuschnigg had fully recovered.

Herr von Schuschnigg appeared to have suffered a complete loss of memory and could remember nothing at the time.

If this condition continued he would not be able to resume the Chancellorship. He was, however, unconscious when he was picked up, and collapsed again when he was told that his wife had been killed. The car caught fire after the crash, but the flames were quickly extinguished by the Chancellor's Aide-de-Camp, who was following in a second car.

The chauffeur was believed to have been overcome by surprise. Frau Schuschnigg was 34 years of age.

She undertook to enter a home pending the result of her appeal.

Advised To Behave. Mr. Mullins, explaining why she had been brought before him, said no suggestion had been offered by her friends in London where she could go pending the appeal.

He therefore took the initiative, and, ascertaining that there was a home ready to accept her, he directed her to be brought to the court. Mr. Mullins advised her to behave in the home.

To-day's Short Story

Birthright In Andalusia

By Theodore Pratt

THIS Spanish priest was a man. His full name was El Senor Don Vicario Miguel Torres y Calafell, but on the ship going over Kenton got to know him as the Vicario. That means "priest" in Spanish. Kenton didn't have any religion, but that didn't make any difference to the Vicario. They hit it off from the minute Kenton found him in the bar swigging a drink and reading his breviary, which was propped against a bottle of seltzer-water.

His mission was about as crazy as any Kenton had ever heard of. Certainly it was dangerous. Only it didn't seem so to him. He never considered that. You don't think much of anything else when your birthright has been taken away from you and you're trying to get it back.

During the five years the Vicario had been attached to a Spanish church in the United States the second Republic of Spain had come into being.

The Church had been separated from the State with violent, almost indecent, alacrity. That meant priests were no longer paid by the Government. Most of all it meant that their power had been shattered. In the days of the monarchy what the priest of a small town said was the last and greatest word. He ranked above

All that was changed now. The Vicario knew it. He came from a small town himself and was once the power there. He was going back to be the power again. He wouldn't stand for the new regime. His dark eyes gleamed in his red face when he thought of it. His stocky, well-fed body inside his black cloth shook with resolve and indignation as he thumped his empty glass on the bar and said: "God damn them!" He meant the Republicans, and what he said wasn't a curse, but a solemn calling upon God to punish sin. After a while he calmed down and found out that Kenton was a writer and had been to Spain before and was going back to find a place to live for a time and work.

"You have written about Spain?" he asked.

"A couple of books." "My gracious. It is good in Andalusia and you will find all you want in Cignes there. Come with me."

Kenton was tall, with fair hair and a nature that was ready for anything, and he took the train out of Alicante with the Vicario at seven in the morning.

The third-class carriage was one long, open compartment with wooden seats running its width. There wasn't any corridor. At Murcia they changed to the Twentieth Century, the Royal Scot of Andalusia, a train that takes eleven hours to speed two hundred and ten miles across the province.

The Vicario didn't pay any attention. He sat in a corner, huddled in his cape, with his edge carried up to cover his mouth. Kenton had never seen him like that before. On the ship he had been the life of the party.

The Royal Scot of Andalusia shuffled for half the morning through fragrant orange and lemon groves. When it came to three houses in a group it was so surprised that it stopped for fifteen minutes.

Then the train achieved a record by stopping at a station where there was only one house, a sort of barn. The Vicario gathered his things together, announcing, "Cignes."

"My God!" Kenton said.

"Hombre!" the Vicario cautioned, "the town is over the hills."

A scared youth named Hilario, but no one else, was waiting for them. There was not room on the seat of Hilario's donkeycart for three, so Kenton sat in the back on a sheepskin. Ahead, as they bumped along, he could hear the boy telling the Vicario what things were like now in Cignes. He expressed the idea that the Vicario should not have come back. "I'll show them," the priest cried violently.

The dry, brown little town came into view over the donkey's ears. The undrained stream that kept it alive sparkled weakly in the burning sun. The overcast church loomed largely, abnormally above the tile roofs. Compared with the small houses it was an exaggeration, a symbol of what the Vicario once stood for.

Kenton began to be aroused for the Vicario when the streets proved deserted and no one came to greet them.

The Vicario turned to Hilario. "Where are the people?" he asked.

"The faithful?"

"They are afraid," Hilario said. The Vicario swore prayers in English. "No," he said, as Hilario whipped his donkey toward the church, "first to the Posaids."

The inn turned out to be one of those medieval affairs that you can still see in remote parts of Spain. The Cignes was one of the last Kenton had ever seen. A long entrance was opened into a vast of cobblestone courtyard. Archways looked around like the ancient prophecies of a carved wooden railing had found the history of the world in which ing towards it. Slowly, methodically, Kenton rose to his feet. He began to make a speech. At first no one heard or listened to him. After a minute or two, however, everybody paid very close attention. He had heard about the Monarchy v. the Republic. He had heard so much of it that he was sick of it. He bored him. All they did was talk. Why didn't they do something?

He proposed that they settle it once and for all, right now. The way to settle it was to take a vote. All in favour of the Republic would raise their right hands.

Hands went up. Kenton counted. All in favour of the Monarchy would make the same indication. Hands went up. Kenton counted again.

"The Monarchy," he announced, "wins by three votes!"

During the next few seconds there was an acute silence. The men had been so astonished by the unprecedented gesture on the part of a foreigner that they had voted instinctively. But at the result they broke loose. Jabbering and shouting, democrats and monarchists alike began to abuse Kenton for taking such a liberty with their affairs. A soggy lemon caught Kenton square in the face. He didn't object. A bottle whizzed past one ear.

Suddenly a hand was laid on his shoulder. Two civil, guardias in the green and yellow clad National Guard of Spain, had appeared. Kenton was informed that he was under arrest for fomenting sedition and causing a disturbance. He would come with them.

In the morning, Kenton, pacing the stone floor of a damp prison cell, felt happy. It was a peculiar way for him to feel, for it is very easy to get into gaol in Spain and very difficult to get out. But he didn't regret it. For it would centre the local situation on him and take attention away from the Vicario.

His satisfaction was disturbed by the entrance into the corridor of the two National Guards who had arrested him. It was disrupted at the sight of the man who accompanied them, the Vicario.

Before the Vicario could say anything, Kenton pleaded in English: "Go away. I don't want you."

"I've come to get you out of this."

"I don't want to get out of it. I want to stay here. It's a fine place. I can work here. I can't work at the Posada with Juana around. Leave me alone."

"You forget," the Vicario said, "that it is I who can put you here or take you out."

"You?"

"And I was not consulted. Therefore, you must be set free."

"Keep out of it, Vicario! Keep out of it!"

"Once again understand," the Vicario said in his own language to the two guardias, "you are to release the extranjero."

One guard shook his head stubbornly. The other nervously fingered the key to Kenton's cell.

"That is impossible, Senor Vicario."

"It shall be done at once!"

These things are now matters for the State alone, Senor Vicario.

The Vicario's eyes burned in his beet-red face. "Francisco," he told the first guard, "I taught you in school, Jaime," he reminded the second guard, "I rapped your knuckles when you didn't know the prayers. I am now going to take that key away from you. You can shoot me if you dare. But if you so much as touch me, your soul will go down into hell!"

The Vicario reached out. The key came away in his hand. He thrust it into the lock, ground the bolt free, swung open the barred door.

The guardias civil, dressed in their glittering uniforms. Their fingers moved towards their carbines. Then they stopped. Silently they swallowed their pride.

"Come out," the Vicario told Kenton.

Kenton came out. He would go to his room and wait. He would not stay now and be insulted by the Vicario's order.

fully and he made a helpless gesture to indicate his failure. "Thank you," she breathed. "But it was foolish. They might have hurt you."

The Vicario came to the inn late that afternoon after the hours of siesta when the air was no longer like steam but merely hot. He sat with Kenton at one of the tables in the courtyard and drank Jeréz, but he didn't flaunt his power.

At first there were not many other people in the courtyard of the Posada. On the side of Kenton and the Vicario a few monarchists sat at the tables. On the other side there were perhaps half a dozen followers of the opposite persuasion. Vicente sidled about in his frock coat, obsequiously serving drinks. Juana appeared went away, appeared again.

Then more men came, singly and in pairs, to join those who sat on the opposite side. They did not glare or scowl at the enemy across the way. It could hardly be noticed that they glanced at them, and they paid them no further attention. But their growing presence generated an air of expectancy.

The Vicario took no notice. He sipped his drink and smoked his cigar. To all outward appearances his content was as inflexible as his campaign for the old order. Kenton, fidgeted in his chair. He wanted what was to happen to start happening. He hated this waiting and didn't see how the Vicario could stand it so implacably.

Suddenly it happened. But it wasn't what Kenton expected. He had pictured fists and the use of his own. What he got was Vicente dressed up in a collar and tie to go with his mayoral frock coat. With two as his cohorts, Vicente advanced across the courtyard and stopped, dramatically, some ten feet away. Every one left off talking to listen and watch. Vicente, in a kind of elaborate officiousness, said: "Senor Don Vicario Miguel Torres."

The Vicario did not rise as he would have done in recognition that he was being addressed by a superior of an equal.

Vicente proceeded to make a speech. It was a sort of political speech and a good deal for the benefit of his supporters. It was very flowery and it was only when the skeleton of it was taken out and put together without the trimmings that what he said became clear. He pointed out that the State had one function and the Church another. The jurisdiction of neither met with that of the other. The Vicario was breaking the law by trying to make it so. That must cease.

When Vicente had finished and stood waiting for a reply, the Vicario calmly announced: "The Church will proceed as it has always proceeded."

The tobacco of Vicente's face remained impassive, but the hit he possessed on a double score for the Vicario broke in his voice as he said:

"Then I cannot, Senor, be responsible for the consequences."

Vicente stood for a moment more as though he would speak again, not wishing it to end upon the other's last word. Then he bowed. The Vicario bowed. Vicente returned to the body of his followers and spoke briefly before taking up his duties of serving drinks.

One by one the men at the other side of the courtyard rose and left. This was not unusual for the quick dusk of Andalusia when it is time for the evening meal, had already begun.

Several men on their side of the courtyard departed. "Adios," they said to the Vicario and Kenton. "Adios," they replied, but no one said very much else. Vicente's collar and tie, his mayoral coat, again filled their glasses and disappeared into the kitchen.

Peace descended upon the Posada, an uneasy peace in which Kenton could not thoroughly believe.

It was almost completely dark when the Vicario came out of the Posada, there stretched against the sky a few stars and a few clouds.

He had no more than he had when he came out. He had no more than he had when he came out. He had no more than he had when he came out.

He had no more than he had when he came out. He had no more than he had when he came out. He had no more than he had when he came out.

He had no more than he had when he came out. He had no more than he had when he came out. He had no more than he had when he came out.

He had no more than he had when he came out. He had no more than he had when he came out. He had no more than he had when he came out.

He had no more than he had when he came out. He had no more than he had when he came out. He had no more than he had when he came out.

He had no more than he had when he came out. He had no more than he had when he came out. He had no more than he had when he came out.

a low voice, he said something which is a way of looking at things that he had learned in America. "O.K.," he murmured. "O.K." Then he shot to his feet, pulled his robes to his knees and called: "Come on!"

They ran through streets alive with the cries of people. In the midst of them a new cry greeted them. It was that of Juana. She stopped them, and when she spoke hurriedly to Kenton she was in reality addressing the Vicario. "The guardias," she panted. "They won't come. They won't stop them."

With this information they rushed on and Kenton, glancing back, saw that the girl was following.

There isn't much to burn about a stone church, but there is enough. The doors will burn, the tapestries, the paintings, and the confessionals will flame, the roof will blaze, and the altar will make an inferno if chairs are piled on either side and soaked with petrol. The walls will even collapse if a thorough job is done in this way.

They were throwing petrol on great bundles of dry twigs piled against the high side doors when Kenton got there with the Vicario. They drove in and began pulling the bundles away.

From somewhere else came the crackle of flames and those preparing for fire here did not intend that they should be stopped. Kenton received a blow on the side of his head that sent him stumbling.

The Vicario and others fought until it was a general melee with no one to put a stop to it.

They fought on until the voice of a girl among them screamed: "The church! Look! The church!"

Kenton loosened his hold on the throat of a man who sloughed convulsively at him with arms and legs, and looked.

The church was lit inside as if for a great function. From the roof smoke was pouring, and through it in several places fire flicked. The doors, already twisted in their agony, were masses of flame. Now they were swinging back, as if miraculously, to reveal the high altar, for which the fire was reaching ravenously.

Kenton sought the Vicario, found him standing a few feet away. His robes were torn, blood was upon his face, and he was breathing hard. When he fully took in the sight before him the priest's shoulders gave way and his chin sank to his chest. For a long time he stayed that way. Kenton sensed his defeat; that this was the end. The birthright of his cloth was vanishing before his very eyes, and the new order in the land had proved the stronger.

Kenton watched as the Vicario straightened. "I came out to his face, in which there was reflected his former resolve. His expression seemed to say that one way remained to shame his enemies. He started at the bright church before him and it lighted his face with a golden glow. Then his shoulders square, his head high, he began to walk towards it."

Ten paces he took before Kenton fully realized what he meant to do. Then Kenton started after him. To bring him back from the madness. But a small, strong hand on his arm stopped him. He turned to see Juana's stricken face and heard, from her throat strangled with emotion, "Can you not see that with this he is dead already?"

Fascinated with horror he stood with her and watched while the Vicario continued his march. The rest of the crowd seemed too awed to stop him or cry out. Through the doors he went. His cape caught fire, but without stopping he went on.

"Straight" to the altar, now burning on both sides, he went. On the steps he knelt. He rose to walk without shrinking to the platform before the altar.

There he began a series of movements. He was saying Mass. People in the crowd, kneeling on the ground, and some standing, murmured the words of the Mass.

Some of the men and Juana looked on with other faces. They were not praying. They were watching. They were waiting for something to happen.

They were waiting for something to happen. They were waiting for something to happen. They were waiting for something to happen.

They were waiting for something to happen. They were waiting for something to happen. They were waiting for something to happen.

They were waiting for something to happen. They were waiting for something to happen. They were waiting for something to happen.

NO ZONES OF INFLUENCE IN ABYSSINIA

STATEMENT BY EMPEROR

"INEVITABLY FOLLOWED BY ANNEXATION"

New York, To-day.
"In no circumstances will we accept a railway or other zone in or through Ethiopia, administered or policed by Italy," declares the Emperor of Abyssinia in a special cable to the "New York Times."
"History teaches that the creation of such a zone is inevitably followed by annexation. We shall continue our peaceful efforts, and only if Italy invades Ethiopia will we offer armed resistance," he continued.—Reuter.

AVIATION PRIZES IN FRANCE

Large Sums Offered For Speed Records

"CHINA MAIL" SPECIAL.
Paris, To-day.
Money prizes of 340,000 francs are offered by the French Air Minister to French airmen obtaining new speed records.
The first aeroplane to beat the record established in the Deutsch de la Meurthe Cup contest, when for a 100 kilometre distance a top speed of 469 kilometres an hour was attained, will receive 40,000 francs. A further 80,000 is also offered for the best speed results on a 100 kilometre flight before September 1 this year, and also 80,000 for a flight over a distance of 1,000 kilometres.—Trans-Ocean Service.

MR. WANG LEAVES FOR TSINGTAO

To Take Long Rest

Shanghai, To-day.
Mr. Wang Ching-wei and his wife left for Tsingtao this morning by train. There is a considerable improvement in the health of Mr. Wang, who, it is reported, will stay at Tsingtao for a long rest.—Reuter.
An earlier message said that it was reliably reported that Mr. Wang Ching-wei's condition had improved and that he was proceeding to Tsingtao to recuperate. The President of the Executive Yuan was said to be requiring four or five weeks' rest.

Roderick Menzel, above, who beat H. Henkel in five sets last Friday, lost to G. von Cramm by a similar margin at Prague yesterday in the European Zone Final of the Davis Cup, which Germany won by 4 matches to 1.

NATIONAL FETE

Despite the literally tropical heat the festivities took on their traditional form of military parades in the morning, attended by the diplomatic corps and many distinguished guests. All sections of France's defence forces, including for the first time the air squadrons, passed in order of review before the President of the republic, M. Lebrun, marching along the famous Champs d'Elysees with bands playing up to the Arc de Triomphe, where is situated the grave of the Unknown Soldier.

JOINT DEMONSTRATION

At 2.30 p.m. the Left-wing political parties held their joint demonstration at the Place de la Bastille, where the crowd destroyed the old fortress prison in 1793, thus starting the French Revolution.

Late in the afternoon the Right-wing parties, the Fire Crossers and the Fascists, made proclamations at the Arc de Triomphe. At neither event had the police any cause for interference.

At 6 p.m. the ceremony of the re-kindling of the Flame of Remembrance at the grave of the Unknown Soldier took place, this also being unaccompanied by any regrettable incident.

PEACEFUL CELEBRATION
Crowds of holiday-makers sat in the cafes and places of amusement and thronged the parks and danced to martial music on the great public squares, as they are accustomed to do every "Glorious Fourteenth."

Similar reports of animated but orderly celebrations from all the provincial centres were received, Ocean Service.

5,000-Foot Wide Break

FOUR TOWNS ENDANGERED

Peiping, To-day.
Although the situation in West Shantung is still very serious, the situation near Tsinan is less threatening.
The water level at Lokow, which was 30.7 feet last Friday, has now dropped to 29.
The reports also state that the level in West Shantung has dropped, but this is possibly due to a break 5,000 feet wide which is reported to have occurred at Monling, as a result of which wide streams of flood water are flowing in several directions, endangering the towns of Chanchen, Yuncheng, Tsaochow and Chuyen.—Reuter.

Next Saturday the Soga, flying the flag of the Rear-Admiral, will leave the Colony for Macao, returning next Monday, when the flag will be re-transferred to the Tatsuta, which will then leave on a southern cruise.
